Dayton Hamvention New gear debut

* Yaesu (Vertex-Standard) had the three versions of its FTdx-9000 series of high-end transceivers on display.

* Icom featured its new IC-7000, which resembles the extremely popular—and still available--IC-706, although it's a bit shorter and features IF DSP filtering and a multicolor TFT display.

* SGC showed off its "Mini-Lini," a 500 W class-E amplifier that fits in your hand and weighs approximately four pounds with the ac supply! It uses plug in band modules and comes with one for 20 meters.

* Brian Wood, W0DZ, who made the real cover of QST in January 2004 with his DX-100, has formed a new company selling Heathkit-style kits that flatter the originals right down to the yellow-covered manuals. His first major offering is the Sienna high-end HF transceiver.

Sumner expressed the League's gratitude to the Dayton Amateur Radio Association and HamventionR Committee for hosting the 2005 ARRL National Convention. "This event has exceeded our expectations in so many ways, due in large part to the volunteers that make Hamvention the 'Greatest Amateur Radio Show on Earth,'" he said. "We thank each and every one of you."
